The Mother of the Wesleys; A Biography Volume 1 John Kirk

This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1866 edition. Excerpt: ...during his own absence in India. "This I likewise assent to," replies Mrs Wesley, "and must own I was mistaken when I did think him fit for it. My own experience hath since convinced me that he is one of those who, our Saviour saith, 'are not so wise in their generation as the children of this world.'" His long-established habits, and the ardent love of more congenial pursuits, disqualified him for the careful and energetic management of glebe and cattle; and the borrowed money necessary to set him up in this little husbandry, brought upon him an annual expenditure for interest which his income could not well bear. By this attempt to better his fortune he probably lost many pounds a year. The step was both unwise and unprofitable. This is an error. John was educated at the Charterhouse. During his Lincolnshire incumbencies, he was three times elected a member of convocation. This required him to spend a considerable time in London at his own expense. He sets down the cost of the three journeys at a hundred and fifty pounds. He could probably have declined the appointment; and censures have been rather liberally awarded him for incurring such heavy expenditure when his present liabilities were so great. But may not something be said in mitigation of these censures! He was an able, prominent, and active clergyman, taking a deep interest in everything connected with his Church. He earnestly advocated carrying out to the full the usages and discipline of the Establishment; and embraced every opportunity to shew his sincere and strong love for ecclesiastical observance and order. His brother clergymen of the Diocese selected him as their fit representative in the deliberations of the most august...
