DETAILED RECORD. Sittings arranged to be held at my house in New York. This is the first of the series. Mrs. Smead arrived last night after travel that left her tired and worried. The little boy with her this morning was fretful and with a disturbed state of mind due to this and her travelling the results were not successful. The little that came was pertinent, but not evidential. October n, 1906. 10:35 A. M. Present J. H. H. In two minutes the hand began to tremble. One and a half minutes later the trembling increased. At the end of four minute the writing began, but the pencil ran off the sheet, followed by a pause. The following explanations will make clear the various symbols used in making the record. The contents of the automatic writing are printed exactly as found in the original, with misspelled words, incomplete sentences, and omissions with asterisks for the illegible matter. The punctuation is my own, except when it occurs occasionally, and this I have indicated in square brackets. I have not been careful to make this punctuation accord with any regular rules, as it might interfere with the interpretation of the record. It is supplied as a pause for the reader, not as an indication of meaning, which the reader may determine as he pleases. The reader of the detailed record must remember that, as the automatic writing proceeded, I read it aloud to indicate that I received the "messages." When a word was not deciphered the writing would pause or the word would be repeated until I read it. Matter enclosed in parenthesis, or round brackets, consists of utterances or questions by the sitter. Matter enclosed in square brackets consists of various comments or notes that are explanatory of certain mechanical or other aspects of the sitting, or of thi...
