In 2008, Marvel Studios launched their first foray into world domination with the release of Iron Man. In the seven years and eleven films since, the studio has gone from an indie hopeful to a massive global blockbuster machine. With 2015's release of Avengers: Age of Ultron, there seems to be nothing that they can't do.

Paul Brian McCoy has been reading Marvel Comics and watching Marvel movies since he was barely old enough to be considered a real human being, and has sat down, done the research, and put together a survey of each film Marvel Studios has produced, from Iron Man to Age of Ultron. Each chapter provides some insight into the creative history of each film, from development hell, casting decisions, fan outcry and enthusiasm, to box office and critical reception. Along the way he also provides brief critical assessments and a joke or two.
